This book was a long time in the making. A very different version was originally composed between 2016 and 2018, but for various reasons I opted to pause, reconsider, and rewrite it almost entirely between 2021 and 2024. While writing was sometimes a lonely enterprise, it would not have been possible without a great deal of support from a great many people. I am indebted to Penguin Random House India, particularly Meru Gokhale who initially commissioned this work, Manasi Subramaniam for seeing it through to its conclusion, and Yash Daiv for his careful copy edits. I am also appreciative of several colleagues, assistants and interns who helped and provided constructive feedback over the years, especially Shruti Godbole, Nitika Nayar, and Ammar Nainar.

I owe much gratitude to my employers over the past two decades and others who gave me the professional space, time, and resources to think through the ideas in this book. Early in my career, I learned a lot from working with Edward Luttwak on how to think creatively through global and historical problems. The late Stephen P. Cohen, for whom I worked as a research assistant, was not only extraordinarily kind and generous but also introduced me to the complexities of security policy and India–Pakistan dynamics. I am grateful to Daniel Twining, Andrew Small and Craig Kennedy for supporting me at the German Marshall Fund from 2009 to 2016, and giving me considerable leeway, responsibilities and exposure to contemporary policy issues in such places as Europe, Southeast Asia and China. Rajesh Basrur and Sumitha Narayanan Kutty enabled a fellowship at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies in 2015 that allowed me to explore security relations between India and Japan. Additionally, Michael Fullilove at the Lowy Institute encouraged me to investigate growing India–Australia ties and invited me to be a non-resident fellow at his organization.
